DOMESTIC ECONOMY!
CAMPILLION CARPET!
A new, cheap, durable, healthy, and beautiful
FLOOR COVERING!
A substitute for oil-cloth at one-third the cost.
This carpet is produced by a peculiar combination of strong, heavy paper, printed in ornamental colors, and coated with a tough, elastic, water proof enamel which receives the water, protects the colors and paper, endures washing, and renders the carpet bright and beautiful in the extreme. Its advantages are as follows:—
Its cost renders it available to all classes; It is exceedingly smooth and glossy, and it accumulates next to no dust; It does not require to be taken up and cleaned like other carpet, and thus saves much labor and trouble; by re-coating with the Campillion Enamel occasionally as the case may require, (which costs but a trifle,) it will last indefinitely, even an age, and always appear new and bright; in its use no reliance whatever is placed upon the paper for wear, but exclusively upon the water-proof coating, the figured paper being used only to secure the colors. Paper has recently been used for a variety of purposes, even for trunks, roofs, flour bags and wearing apparel, but the first attempt, either in Europe or America, to convert it into carpet or floor covering, all concede it to be an entire success!
We have purchased the right for columbia county and can furnish the carpet to merchants at manufacturers prices.
You are invited to call and examine the goods at our store. M'KELVY, NEAL & CO.

Miscellaneous.

THE BEAN.

H. ZSCHOKKE.

I was in despair—so began the young banker Walter at an evening party;—for nine weeks I went everywhere in Vienna, into all parties, under all pretences, and at every police-office I described the lady Von Tarnau, her aunt, and the maid-servant; no one could tell whither they had gone. Good advice indeed was not wanting, for that is always cheap. I was directed to all the points of the compass to find my goddess.

She was no longer in Vienna. But although I was told so at the hotel where she had lived, and although I occupied the same room which had once been hers, I still sought her. I was at all churches and masses, at all masquerades and balls, at all plays and places of amusement. Enough—love's labour was lost. My angel had vanished.

Inconsolable, I left the capital, and in the worst winter weather returned home.

But to make the whole singularity of my fate clear to you, I must tell you how I became acquainted with the lady. You will find much in my story that is wonderful, but in love every thing is romance.

* * * * * * * *

Three years before, I had visited Vienna on business. Our house was threatened with a great loss. I succeeded in averting the misfortune, and then availed myself of the opportunity to participate in the amusements of Vienna. Who knows, thought I, that I shall ever again come to Vienna?

My acquaintances carried me into all companies; I was introduced into many family circles; the mothers received me very kindly, and their fair daughters not less so. I was known to be unmarried, and the name of our house was not unknown to the fathers. I passed everywhere as the rich banker, and was addressed by the title of Mr. Von Walter.

On account of the peculiarities of my good old father, I had never thought of marrying. Of course, entirely free, I fluttered from one fair one to another. I loved them all, but no one in particular.

"The lady Von Tarnau is every moment expected," lisped an elderly lady near me, at an evening party to a young neighbor.

"She is a dear good creature," replied the young lady addressed; "she would be thought perfectly beautiful, were it not for that horrible defect."

"Ah!" said the elderly lady, "you mean the mole she has on her breast, just below her neck? they say that it is in the form of a mouse!"

"A mouse! Pardon, my dear lady, if it were nothing worse than that, it would not be necessary for her to wrap herself up so like a nun. No, it is just like a camel, with two humps, four legs, and a long neck."

"Don't you believe that!" said another who joined in the conversation. "I know all about it. It is a mole of a very peculiar kind, of a monstrous size, and covers her whole neck. It is a shocking disfigurement."

"Indeed, that is frightful!" exclaimed the old lady.

"Yes, and if I were so disfigured," said one of the young ladies, modestly casting her eyes down upon the fine gauze which lay upon her fair neck like a cloud on the snow, "I do believe it would kill me."

Others now joined in the conversation; every one confirmed the fact, and all pitied the young lady Von Tarnau on account of this great misfortune.

The door opened. The young lady and her aunt entered.

Had she not already awakened an interest in me through the preceding conversation, she would have riveted my attention by her uncommon beauty and grace. An ideal, such as we sometimes admire in the pictures of Angelica Kauffmann, a—no, smile not, I was not then in love, and now I am married, so I utter nothing but truth.

Enough, the lovely Tarnau won the eyes and hearts of all the gentlemen; they all approached her with an expression of interest, brightened by the tenderest sympathy. But she was impenetrably vailed close up to her chin. This peculiarity of her dress, of course, incessantly reminded one of the mouse, and another of the camel. Ah! thought every one, why was fate so cruel as to deform the sweetest creature under the sun in this dreadful manner!—and, I cannot deny it, I thought so too.

I am not by nature curious, but on that evening this sin plagued me as never before. My eyes continually wandered over the folds of the thick vail; I repeated my voyage of discovery every quarter of an hour. I always found opportunity to stand next to the fair unfortunate. But in vain.

There was dancing. Several couples had already taken their places. The beautiful Tarnau remained unasked,—how powerful is imagination! I asked her to dance; she gave me her hand. I continued her partner the rest of the evening.

She hovered lightly around me, like one of Titania's elves, in all her motions, smiles, looks, words, full of inexpressible sweetness—Ah! shame upon the masterpiece of Nature, who, in cruel wantonness, had ruined her most beautiful work.

The company separated late. The beautiful unfortunate had enraptured me. She was so innocent and saintly and unconstrained. Ah! happily she knew not what every one else knew! So much the better for her. I was not romantic enough to fancy that I had fallen in love at first sight, although it would not have been strange if I had done so. This much I readily confess, that as yet no woman had ever captivated me to such a degree. A deep sympathy touched my heart; and certainly such an angel deserved at least a little pity!

The next day I had already forgotten—forgotten? no, I will not say that, for one cannot well help thinking of so strange a freak of nature, by which all the magic of beauty was mixed with the hatefullest of hateful things. As I returned from a walk, and ascended the steps of the hotel, I suddenly met the lady and her aunt descending.

Naturally enough we stopped and exchanged friendly inquiries. Surprise was expressed on both sides that we should have been residing under the same roof without knowing it. I showed my pleasure at the discovery, and begged permission at suitable hours to see the ladies in their apartments. At the word "see," I really looked—for my curiosity again arose—towards the region of the horrid mole, but a thick shawl, carefully pinned under her chin, covered the young lady's breast and shoulders, and therefore I preferred to look at the angelic, beautiful face above.

They went down the steps, and I went hastily into my room, in order to have another sight of that delicate form from my window. They got into a carriage and drove off. Ah, sighed I, what a pity that such an angel should be so terribly disfigured!

I did not forget the permission they had given me to come and see them, and from time to time I made the ladies a visit. They were, like myself, strangers in Vienna, and had been introduced to my friend, at whose house, a few evenings before, I had become acquainted with them, by an Augsburg firm, from whom they received their funds.

I attended my fellow-boarders to the promenade, to the theatre, and to all places where there was any thing to be seen. The beautiful Josephine—for so her aunt called her—manifested the fine qualities of her mind and heart the more I became acquainted with her. But it did not escape me that the longer our acquaintance lasted, the more carefully did she conceal her unfortunate disfigured breast. Josephine was the most perfect woman that I had ever seen in my life; but nothing under the sun is quite perfect.

As we saw each other daily, we became every day more intimate. At last it seemed as if I wholly belonged to them. The aunt treated me with the familiarity which grows out of traveling in company. In Josephine's manner of addressing me I fancied that I perceived some tender marks of friendship.

When I was occasionally prevented from joining the ladies by business, I was compelled to listen to some slight reproaches; and when Josephine, sitting motionless and silent, would fix her eyes upon me as if she sought to look into my very soul, and ask, Who art thou?—ah! it is impossible to say how I then felt.

But at last no business ever hindered me, and I came punctually with the clock.

My heaven, however, did not last long. I received a letter from home. My good father had had an apoplectic stroke; he longed to see me. It was necessary that I should use the utmost haste if I would again embrace him in this world.

The letter arrived in the morning. In half an hour all was packed, and the post-coach stood at the door of the hotel. I was almost out of my senses with anxiety. My servant announced that all was ready. I went down to the street like one in a dream. The thought of taking leave of my fellow-boarders never occurred to me; and I was just about to jump into the coach, when a voice from above called to me, "Where are you going?"

It was the sweet voice of Josephine. I looked up; she stood at the window and repeated the question. My recollection returned. I flew back into the hotel and up stairs to obey the dictates, if not of friendship, at least of politeness.

I knocked at the door, and it sprang open. Josephine, still in her morning-dress, came towards me, but starting back with an expression of the liveliest alarm—

"Gracious heaven!" cried she, "what is the matter with you? What has happened? How pale and ghastly you look!"

As she said this with great emotion, and stretched out her hand to seize mine, the Cashmere shawl which she had thrown loosely over her fell open in front. And—may the shade of my honored father pardon me—but curiosity is a most unfortunate sin—I forgot journey, apoplexy, and extra post, and had eyes only for the revealed secret of Josephine's breast.

Imagine my astonishment!—I saw a breast as white and clear as ivory, and, two inches below the dimple of her alabaster throat, the unfortunate mole. But it was no mouse, no camel; only a dark-brown spot on the skin about the size and the shape of a small bean. I could have sworn that a pretty bean was lying on the blinding snow.

Josephine, blushing, drew the shawl together again,—but I could not speak. Whether it were the apoplexy or the bean—enough, I stood confounded like a statue.

"For heaven's sake!" cried her aunt, "tell us what has happened to you! Have you met with any misfortune?"

"My father has had an apoplectic stroke—he is at the point of death—I must leave you."

I could say no more. I kissed the ladies' hands, and took leave. For a moment, but only for a moment, Josephine held my hand convulsively grasped in hers. Her countenance was pale, and her eyes wet; perhaps it was not so, for I hardly saw any thing. Every thing danced before my eyes.

Once in the carriage, I thought of nothing but my dear father's death-bed. I travelled day and night in a perfect fever. The days thus spent were the most painful of my life. I had only a few happy moments amidst the confused dreams that hovered before me. Only now and then did Morpheus or the fever show me the bean in the snow.

When at last the coach stopped before the paternal mansion, some of my relatives [illegible] came out to meet me, [illegible] My father had left the world, and his ashes already rested in the tomb.

I will not say how violent was my grief. With all his humors, I loved my father with the most filial tenderness. Grief and the excitement of the journey prostrated my health. I was seized with a violent fever, which was really a benefit to me, as I became wholly unconscious. For three months I did not leave my bed. When I recovered, as it were, out of a cloud, I was as cold and indifferent as if nothing had happened, as if I had lost all feeling.

The affairs of our house had been thrown into some confusion by the death of my father and the long continuance of my illness. Happily for me, labor and occupation were afforded me.

Within a year and a day, however, every thing was put to rights, and I was the master of my house. And when the black crape disappeared from my arm and hat, aunts and cousins thronged around me, full of marriage plans. Such manifestations of cousinly and auntly regard are as necessary and unavoidable as birth and death. I let the match-makers have their way, and troubled myself very little about their advice or their plans. No cousin, no aunt—Hymen's ever-ready servants—can ever effect so much as simply a single pretty maiden, and at the right hour. But in our whole city and neighborhood there was no pretty maiden—no, that is a calumny: it was the magic hour that had not come.

Nevertheless, this continual questioning and answering brought me to reflection; I really perceived that I was alone, and that I wanted something. My house, since my father's death, had become a wilderness. And yet, among the ten thousand young ladies whom I had ever seen, I knew no one with whom I should like to share my life and my wilderness.

My residence in Vienna and the beautiful Tarnau suddenly occurred to me, I know not how, for it was a long-forgotten story. Fortunately, I was alone in my room, for I believe that I grew fire-red at the remembrance; at last I suddenly sprung up from the sofa, stretched my arms far out into the air as if to embrace the heavenly image, and sighed—no, I called aloud with mingled rapture and pain, "Josephine! Josephine!"

That was, I believe, the magic hour. —To increase my disquiet, the very next night the god of dreams showed me the bean in the snow. Josephine was beautiful enough in herself, but my enamored imagination illuminated her with unearthly beauty. Let no one laugh—I had gone to bed sober, but I arose the next morning intoxicated with love.

Now, indeed, was my house desert and waste, as the old Chaos of Creation might have been. I sought Josephine everywhere; I saw her everywhere. I thought of her as my wife, now at the piano, and myself behind her listening; and now at my side on the sofa at a little round breakfast-table. In the tumult of my imagination, all her indescribable grace, her smile, her look, and her nightingale tones became ever more bewitching. I was no longer master of myself; I was lost in a conflict of emotions of all sorts; at one time I was upon the point of shouting aloud from very ecstasy, so bright were my dreams, and then, again, I was ready to weep. When I thought how Josephine, perhaps, might reject me, sometimes, I believe, I really did shout and weep, for I was like a wild dreamer, who is only at home with his ideal, and is deaf and blind to the outward world.

This condition was intolerable. I arranged my business, ordered post-horses, and flew to Vienna.

It is true, some sober considerations now and then occurred to me on the way. How much might she have changed in sixteen months! thought I. Perhaps she loves another. Perhaps she is married. She may not be at her own disposal. She is too young, and has parents and relatives, and they have views which neither of us know of; or she may be of high rank.

I then thought over our former friendly intimacy, and consoled myself with the remembrance of her pale countenance, her suffused eyes, and her ardent, involuntary pressure of my hand when we parted. In all these things I found proof of Josephine's interest in me—proofs even of love, although these circumstances might have been interpreted in a different way. But that I might not utterly despair, I was forced to conclude on the whole that the lady Von Tarnau was not indifferent to me. Better not to live, than to live without her; better deluded and happy, than knowing the truth and miserable!

Filled with these thoughts, I again approached Vienna. But when I saw the steeples and roofs in the distance, it occurred to me that, although I had considered all chances, I had not taken into account that a year ago Josephine was a stranger like myself in Vienna, and could hardly be in Vienna still.

DO YOU ADVERTISE?—The business of a place is measured by the extent of its advertisements. If a merchant has goods to sell and wants to sell them, he should advertise them. When a new or rare article of produce is obtained, it should be thrown into Market by an advertisement, if a quick sale is desired. If a farmer has a choice article for sale, let him advertise it, and he need not spend days in looking for a purchaser for one will be at his house immediately. If a mechanic desires work, let him advertise for it, and he will receive calls from persons who never before saw him. If a person wishes to employ workmen or laborers, let him advertise, and he will be able to make the better selection. While it is true that some readers scarcely even read advertisements in a paper, a majority do read and remember. It is obvious that the man who advertises and the business which is advertised secures the most patronage and success. Reader, do you advertise your business and your wants?

REMARKS
SENATOR BUCKALEW,
ON THE DEATH OF THADDEUS STEVENS,

Delivered in the U. S. Senate.

MR. BUCKALEW. Mr. President, New England has given to Pennsylvania two men of great distinction, though of unequal merit.

In provincial times Franklin came from Boston to Philadelphia, a fugitive youth, and entered upon that career which has been given to the history of the world. As author and publisher, as representative in the Colonial Assembly of Pennsylvania, as member and president of the State constitutional convention of 1776 and chief executive officer in the government established by that convention, as colonial agent in Great Britain, as delegate in the Continental Congress and signer of the Declaration of Independence, as organizer of the postal service in the country under the Confederation, as a scientist and member of learned bodies at home and abroad, and finally, as our illustrious and successful minister at the French court in the dark hours of the Revolution, he is known of all men and his name will go down to future ages. It is the pride of our people to contemplate the colossal reputation which he achieved and left behind him, and they dwell with pleasure upon the minutest particulars concerning him from that hour when, obscure and friendless, he appeared in the city of his adoption to the time when "full of years and full of honors" he passed away to his appointed repose.

Thaddeus Stevens came from Vermont to Pennsylvania at the age of twenty-one. He came unheralded and unattended, to carve his way to fortune among strangers.

Adams county, Pennsylvania, lies upon the Maryland boarder, and Gettysburg is the county town—the seat of justice for the county. At that place Mr. Stevens settled after a short residence at York, and commenced the practice of the law. It was not a place to make great gains at the bar. The town was not large, the county was not populous, the people were not wealthy. It was a rural section of the State; railroads were unknown, manufactures, except in a small way, had not been established; farmers and shopmen mainly were the clients of men "learned in the laws." But there were sound elements of population in he town and county—the German and Scotch-Irish being prominent—distinguished for industry, frugality, fidelity, an sound sense. And it was a pleasant region, broken but fertile, farm and woodland alternating in the landscape, with hill and mountain in the distance, forest-clothed from base to summit. There were a few scattered villages for the convenience of merchants, blacksmiths, carpenters, and other traders and workmen, and mills sounded along the streams. Cemetery Hill then, as now, overlooked the town of Gettysburg; but no war—at least no war of civilized man—had ever echoed upon its heights, nor had its soil received, as a harvest of battle, the bodies of our patriot dead.

Mr Stevens's long residence in a rural district, such as I have described it, influenced in a great degree his subsequent character and conduct. And it gave him a wider knowledge of men and affairs than he could have acquired if he had been at all times the resident of a city. He knew the men of the country as city men cannot know them, and with him always "knowledge was power," and he gave it prectical application to the management of men.

Mr. Stevens entered public life at the ripe age of forty as a Representative in the Pennsylvania Legislature from Adams county. I shall not detail with exactness or at length the facts of his public career; nor shall I pronounce an eulogium upon him or express emotions of personal grief at his removal by death from a field of action and service in which he was conspicuous. His labors will be detailed more fully by others, and his character is one not so much for eulogium as for analysis and for reflection. And as to manifestations of sensibility at this time, I have to say that I think it will be proper to regard somewhat his example upon like occasions, and his general views concerning funeral solemnities. He did not respect insincere or undue praise of the dead, and he always refused to wear crape in honor of their memory.

But some notice of his life and character by the two Houses of Congress is most becoming in view of his eminence and of the influence which he exerted upon legislation and upon popular thought. And such notice may be made instructive to men of the present and to men of future times.

The firs knowledge I recollect to have acquired of Mr. Stevens was in 1838. It was from a speech which had been delivered by him in the Legislature of Pennsylvania upon the subject of education. After the lapse of thirty years I can remember that he spoke of the time when "the atoms of creation shall bubble in the crucible of the Almighty," meaning the time of the final destruction of the earth. When I read that, I thought, with the taste of a boy, that it was a most eloquent and admirable passage. I do not think so now.

Mr. Stevens for many years (both within and without the Legislature) conducted or assisted to conduct a war upon the institution of Free Masonry, and eventually set on foot a legislative investigation of its mysteries. In those years he showed himself to be an able and eloquent leader of party, and obtained for the first time distinction and influence. But his effort were unsuccessful. Masonry stands as it has stood for ages among the benevolent institutions of civilized States.

Mr. Stevens contributed some brilliant speeche to the cause of education in Pennsylvania, though his influence in the establishment and support of our common-school system has been somewhat exaggerated.

His service in the canal board of Pennsylvania, to which he was appointed in 1838, provoked much denunciation, particularly as regarded the making and abrogation of contracts upon the public works and the uses of a fund provided for their repair; and his connection with the difficulties at Harrisburg in 1839 provoked still more.

The question in 1839 was one of party power in the Legislature, and it arose upon the election of members from Philadelphia county.

There was a great excitement, and the public peace was imperiled. Troops were brought to Harrisburg, and citizens flocked there in large numbers from all parts of the State. Eventually the difficulty was composed by a recognition of the members really elected, and the disturbance was given to history under the name of the "Buckshot war." I believe there is now but one opinion upon what then took place, and that is that Mr. Stevens and those who acted with him were entirely wrong, and that an honest decision was reached under the pressure of popular opinion.

Mr. Stevens was prominently connected with the creation of the public debt of Pennsylvania, as he was with that of the United States. I think that one third of the former was due to his efforts and influence in the passage of appropriations not always well considered or judicious. Struck by the advantages of public works in increasing the wealth of the State and the prosperity of particular distaicts, his habit of mind was to overlook particular obstacles and cautious deduction. His imagination kindled in contemplating remote but grand results and he scorned the reasonings of prudence, and was indifferent to the means by which he wrought. I know it may be said that it is easy now, with results before us, to condemn such improvements as the Gettysburg railroad, the Erie extension, and the Wiconisco feeder, and that the men of 1838 should not be judged in the light of our present information. But I must declare my fixed conviction that the conduct of public men in their appropriations of public money and creation of public debts should be judged by stern rules. They are the trustees of property interests not their own, and their errors and improvidence must not go uncondemned.

Mr. Stevens was a member of the constitutional reform convention of 1838, but was not an active member during the latter part of its proceedings, nor did he sign the amendments proposed by it for popular adoption, for the reason already stated by my colleague.

I turn, however, from his State to his congressional carreer. He came into Congress twenty years ago as a Representative from the Lancaster district. After a services of four years he was absent eight, and then, being again returned, was a leading member of the House until his death. These words—a leading member—are not an exaggeration. He led others, and was not led by them; and he had two capital qualifications for mastership in the House. He had a very vigorous will, and he had wit also, which was to him a powerful instrument for both aggressive and defensive debate.

Mr. Stevens was in the latter part of his career sometimes pleasantly called "the great Commoner;" but this invitation to a comparison between him and Chatham was not well advised. Perhaps it does not deserve serious treatment, but as there is no eminent public man in our political history with whom Mr. Stevens can be compared—none essentially like him—we may be excused for pausing upon this invited comparison with a foreign Statesman of a former age. Pitt, unlike Lord North was not a man of wit; but his general powers of intellect for parliamentary service were unrivalled. Besides, his abilities were well suited to executive service, as shown by him when chief minister of the Crown. He united prudence with daring, and was as sagacious as he was bold. Burke has told us of his achievements when he first held the powers of the sovereign and enjoyed the confidence of the Commons; and the subject was worthy the hand of that great master. It is true that points of resemblance may be mentioned between the British statesman and the American leader. Both were men of strong will; both had large influence in representative bodies; both were greedy of applause, though proud, self-sustained, and undemonstrative in its enjoyment; both were leaders of party but often exhibited independence of party control; both had the great gift of eloquence, though in different manner and in unequal degree. Pitt's elocution was sonorous and commanding, his sentiments lofty, his language, "drawn from the wells of English undefiled," was polished, vigorous, and pure. Besides, he had a moral weight which is sometimes wanting to public men. For he was deeply attached to a lawful spouse, and he respected all those proprieties of private life and of public station which go to make up admired character.

Mr. Stevens had not a high opinion of men with whom he was brought in contact. His eye was keen to all their defects, and he felt his own mental superiority. This gave him coolness and confidence for debate. Besides, his training at the bar had taught him forensic art and had exercised and strengthened his logical powers. He had the great merit of speaking with directness and of controlling his topics instead of being controlled by them. Therefore he was not tedious, and was always instructive.

Among the measures supported by Mr. Stevens in Congress was one to regulate the price of gold, or to prevent speculative sales of gold, a measure to which there was but one objection, which was that it undertook to accomplish that which was impossible. It was repealed soon after its passage.

He was early in the war an advocate for the issue of Government notes, and carried through the House the first bill for that purpose. Long afterwards he desired to issue $500,000,000 in addition to the great volume of government curmoney then in circulation, but did not secure the adoption of his views. He had no more confidence than most men in paper money, and denied always the liability of the Government to pay its obligations in coin except where expressly stipulated by contract.

He was sincere and earnest in pursuing his objects and not scrupulous in the use of means for their accomplishment. Party was with him but a means to an end, and he never hesitated to unite with political opponents to secure his purpose. There were many notable instances of this conduct during his service in the House. His impatience with political associates when they differed from him was often strongly manifested; in private discourse without restraint, and in public with emphasis, though with more of decorum. Nor did he withhold himself upon occasion from directing his shafts of satire against particular members of this body.

Upon the conclusion of the war Mr. Stevens announced his theory of conquest and the policy to be predicated thereon. There was a doctrine of forfeiture involved in the former, which, being written in no code nor illustrated by any American example, was slowly accepted in the counsels of his party and in the debates of Congress. It was that the southern States had forfeited all right to self-government and to their civil institutions by rebellion against Federal authority. Assuming, next, that this Government as conqueror of those States had by virtue of the laws of war complete power over them, the way was open for propositions of policy concerning them. Gradually his theory prevailed, and many measures founded upon it have been passed and executed. He lived long enough to see his theory accepted and his policy triumphant. In his own party doubters had become resolved, the timid emboldened, the refractory subdued, and all opposition intimidated or silenced. His passions and his will had their complete gratification, except in the two important particulars of confiscation and impeachment. From all this it will appear that he died at a fit time to be canonized as a great and successful leader of party.

Mr. President, for what will men care to remember Mr. Stevens? He will be remembered for his wit and humor, which were genuine and constant; suited to enliven a dull debate or a tedious trial; to charm a social circle or an occasional companion.

He will be remembered as a lawyer, able, eloquent, and careful; fit for the rough work of a nisi prius trial or for grave debate in a court of error. Men of the legal profession will hold in memory one who adorned that profession and won its triumphs.

He will be remembered for some generous acts to persons in misfortune; acts magnanimous and noble, which he did not publish abroad, but which have transpired through the gratitude and admiration of others.

He will be remembered as a parliamentary leader; as the man who, beyond any example since Randolph and Clay, gained the ear of the House and held it for many years against all competitors—in all the years of the war and since the war—and resigned his influence only with his life.

Lastly, he will be remembered for his support of emancipation and colored suffrage, great questions which, whatever may be their merits, will be of enduring interest. He projected some and supported all the measures by which they were established and upheld during his life, and left his name to be associated with debate and discourse upon them hereafter.

Sir, men will be apt to forget his imperfections of temper, his defective moral organization, his disregard of proprieties in speech and conduct, his occasional defiance of public opinion, and generally the errors and faults of a lifetime of contest, in contemplating his true and undoubted titles to future fame. If in examining his character I have spoken with freedom and have not withheld the truth which told against him, it has been done in all loyalty to our common manhood and in view of those purposes of instruction with which my task was begun. And thus I leave the subject and the man.

ECONOMY IN THE USE OF COAL.—At the present high prices of coal it behooves all to be economical in the use of it. Some housekeepers, in the management of their fires, seem to suppose that an addition of fuel will insure increased combustion, and develop additional heat. No idea can be more mistaken. Coal, and especially anthracite coal, should be always furnished with a sufficient amount of oxygen to keep the fire bright. It is only smothering and retarding the fire to put in a thick layer of coal, or as some do, fill the fire box, from a layer of two inches of ignited coal, to its utmost capacity, with fresh fuel. No mor coal should be put upon a fire at one time than will readily ignite and give off a pure white blaze—not a blue flame, which denotes the presence of unconsumed gases, and the fire should be undisturbed on the top. In clearing the grate in the morning there is a quantity of unburned coal, which has been externally subjected to combustion. It is covered with ash, and looks like cinder. It is often dumped into the ash box. The fact is that the lump is only roasted on the outside, not even cooked, and is in a better condition for igniting than the green coal. Never waste it. Attention to these few hints will save many dollars in a winter.—Sunbury Gazette.

A SCHOOL MONTH.—The Pennsylvania School Journal gives the following as the law fixing a school month:

"That twenty-two days shall be held to be a school month, and that two Saturdays in each month, as the proper board shall designate, which two Saturdays shall be held to be a part of the school month, may, at the discretion, and by an affirmative vote of a majority of all the members of the Board of Directors, or Controllers, be appropriated to institutes for the improvement of the teachers of the said district: Provided, That in districts in which the schools are, or shall be, kept open, and in operation, the maximum term now allowed by law, and the teachers employed by the year, the foregoing clause as to the number of days in the school month, shall not apply any further than that the reports and statistics of the school shall be kept in accordance therewith, and that District Institutes may be held as thereby directed; all acts or parts of acts, inconsistent herewith, be and are hereby repealed.

The Columbian.

BLOOMSBURG, PA.

FRIDAY MORNING, JAN. 1, 1869.

☞ THE COLUMBIAN has the Largest Circulation in Columbia and adjoining counties of any paper published here, and is also a much larger sheet than any of its cotemporaries; and is therefore the best medium for advertising in this section of the State.

THE NEW YEAR.

Consolidation of Journals.

THE FUTURE.

THE third yearly volume of THE COLUMBIAN, (as reorganized under the purchase of Dec. 1866,) commences with the present number. But the paper is changed in position if not in character by the union with it of the Bloomsburg Democrat, heretofore published by W. H. Jacoby. We add the words, "and Bloomsburg Democrat" after "Columbian" in the advertisement head on our first page to indicate this change, and place also under our main head in addition to the regular numbering of the COLUMBIAN the volume and number which would belong to the paper as a continuation of the original Columbia Democrat which was established in April 1837.

REASONS FOR CONSOLIDATION.

Our purchase of the Democrat is prompted by motives which lie upon the surface. By the purchase we obtain, to a moderate extent, an increase of advertising patronage, the principal source of support to the country press. Again, we can furnish our paper to new subscribers, added to our list, at a cost not much exceeding the cost of paper and labor employed in enlarging our issue, leaving a fair margin for profit. In short our purchase was made for business reasons which lie open to complete observation. Political considerations did not control us. Although many persons are of opinion that rival newspapers, of the same political complexion in the same town, are a certain cause of party division and weakness, we cannot agree with them. We think on the contrary that multiplied party organship is usually a source of strength. And upon this question our experience in this county ought to be held conclusive. The Columbia Democrat and the Star of the North were for many years rival newspapers, of the same political faith but with diverse interests. Yet their rivalry did not produce party weakness. Again, ever since the establishment of the COLUMBIAN there has been to some extent a rivalry between it and the Democrat though both have been united in opposition to the Radical party. Under this state of things what have we seen? Why, the strength of the party they represented increasing every year in the County, until our majorities have become a matter of pride at home and of commendation abroad. The explanation of such a result is not difficult. Each newspaper in such a case reaches and influences a certain number of men who could not be reached or influenced by the other. The totality of party strength is therefore increased. Thus the Star of the North formerly and the COLUMBIAN more recently, though established as rivals of existing newspapers, have greatly promoted the interests of the cause to which they gave their support.

But there are advantages in consolidation which are not to be overlooked. By it editorial effort will be concentrated and much expense avoided. Energy and effort will not be wasted or improvidently applied. This week, for instance, we are able by a single publication to cast more than 2,500 copies of Mr. Buckalew's address upon Thaddeus Stevens before readers in this county, beside sending a respectable number to subscribers and exchanges abroad.

Lastly, by consolidation there is secured to our people an annual saving of several hundred dollars upon newspaper subscriptions. About 300 persons have been subscribers to both journals who will be obliged hereafter to pay for but one. This will be a sensible relief, being equivalent to a tax reduction for them of $600 per annum.

OUR FUTURE COURSE.

Professions as to the course we intend to pursue in conducting our journal hereafter, may be thought superfluous or suspicious. But we desire to say a few words on that subject. In the first place, we intend that our journal, as a political organ, shall not represent the selfish interests of any man or set of men, but the common interests and sentiments of a great party. It is intended that it shall be impartial and just in its treatment of condidates for nomination as well as faithful and zealous in its support of nominations when made. Our object will be to allay disputes and secure harmony in party action: all which we suppose will be compatible with complete independence and self respect.

We feel a just pride in the position and character of our party in this county. It is constituted of honorable men, sincere, unselfish and patriotic in opinion, who have shown their courage in defeat and their moderation in triumph. Not influenced by official patronage, nor intimidated by persecution, nor mislead by appeals to passion, they have held steadily to a course sanctioned by duty and honor. Thus has it ever been since this county was erected and thus may it be always hereafter! Our fidelity to them is founded upon deep respect and friendly attachment, and we are confident that that fidelity will at all times accompany us and direct us in our editorial labors.

But, we propose also to give to our paper a literary character which shall render it acceptable to readers of different political opinions, and to furnish with tolerable completeness the news of the day. For we hold that a newspaper has other duties beside ministering a party passion which should not go undischarged. In conclusion we ask from all our patrons, old and new, their generous confidence and friendship—that support and that favor which constitute the proper encouragement and just reward of editorial toil.

DEATH OF WILLIAM CURTIS.—Mr. William Curtis, Grand Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows for the State of Pennsylvania, and who has served in that capacity for many years, died suddenly of apoplexy on Sunday morning. He was widely known from his connection with the order, and highly respected.

Capt. Henry Webb.

IN the Columbia Democrat, Vol. X. No. 48, dated March 20th 1847, Capt. Webb published his valedictory address to his patrons, informing them that he had sold out his establishment to L. L. Tate. He stated that it was nine years since he had become a resident of the County and the proprietor of the Democrat (which he had purchased from a Mr. Ingham) that he had met much opposition and some abuse for his support of the measure of removing the seat of Justice from Danville to Bloomsburg; that in the triumph of that measure justice had been secured and he desired that all the ill feelings connected with the struggle should be forgotten, and that the people of the county should be in the future united and harmonious.

The years during which Capt. Webb published the Democrat, covered the time of severest contest over the Removal question. By a popular vote of 2913 to 1579, given at the general election in 1845, the removal had been decreed, and in due time it was consummated. The Captain's work was done: his mission was accomplished, and he rejoiced at the result. He had "borne the heat and burden of the day," and he retired at a fit moment from his position, for labor in the cause in which he had been engaged was no longer required.

Capt. Webb did much work for poor compensation when conducting the Democrat. We do not mean editorial labor alone, but mechanical work in his office and generally in conducting his paper. He had little assistance and was without much means. Besides, he did much journeying through the county for political as well as business purposes. He was not an illiberal or hard man any more than a prosperous one. He was a pioneer of the press and took the rough and badly-paid fortunes of a pioneer, without complaint. The little old office he occupied on the South side of Main Street has long disappeared, and successive newspaper establishments have appeared upon the scene with various conductors to fill the place formerly occupied by his journal:—the Columbia Democrat—the Star of the North—the Democrat and Star—the Bloomsburg Democrat—the Columbia County Republican—and last but not least, THE COLUMBIAN. In these journals there has been, upon the whole, a progressive improvement both in literary contents and mechanical execution.

Capt. Webb, we believe, never held a civil office. After the Removal he was a candidate before a County Convention for nomination to the office of Prothonotary but was unsuccessful. The veteran Prothonotary Jacob Eyerly was renominated and we suppose he would have been successful against any one at that time.

Almost the last employment of Capt. Webb was the construction of a graded road leading out of Bloomsburg toward Orangeville, around the western end of Cedar Hill, a work which was under his charge as Supervisor.

He was a tall, thin man, but muscular and active. He had intelligence, a social disposition and much fidelity of character. He has a native of Windham, Connecticut, and before coming to this county had resided in Luzerne.

He died in Bloomsburg, September 22, 1848. He was born July 23, 1796.

IN AFFLICTION.—The person who seems to feel the worst over the recent newspaper change in this place is the editor of the Republican. He sees that it means peace and harmony among the Democracy, and hence forgetting that he is not addressing his own people, he frantically exclaims, "Is this so? Are the old Democrats of Columbia willing to be bought and sold like so much merchandize?" This appeal comes from one in authority. The Chairman of the Republican Party in this county in a paroxysm of agony, gives this advice, and to make it more effective the old Democrats are appealed to. Again he exclaims, "We believe the large proportion of the Democrats will have eyes large enough to see, and hearts honest enough to reject the roguery in this sale." Good, again, Doctor. If large eyes will increase their perceptive qualities, these "honest Democrats" will see no more roguery in the purchase of the Democrat than there was in the sale of the Republican. The difference is that the one was an amicable arrangement among the parties, while the other was forced by political pressure.

Of course we understand the cause of the Doctor's alarm. The acquisition of 1,000 new subscribers leaves him so far in the back-ground that he has not the ghost of a chance of ever catching up to us. Take things coolly. When "old" Democrats want advice they will go elsewhere for it.

* * *

THE most gigantic frauds of the age have lately been exposed in New York through the columns of the World. A special commissioner employed by that paper has procured samples of various articles of groceries and liquors, most of which have been found to be not only short in weight, but adulterated to a shameful and criminal degree. Short weight was found to be the rule rather than the exception, whilst the adulterations, especially in the matter of liquors, and these obtained at the most respectable and expensive houses, might almost have been termed slow poisoning. In New York the law requires that scales should be tested once a year, but in the country they are seldom if ever tested. In view of this fact we would recommend persons purchasing goods to re-weigh them, and satisfy themselves of their correctness.

A PETITION, headed by Hon. C. R. Buckalew of this place and signed by about forty other gentlemen of democratic persuasion has been presented to the President asking for a proclamation extending amnesty to all persons engaged in the recent rebellion who are now under presentment or indictment. Such a proclamation is intended to set Jeff. Davis entirely free.—Republican.

THE Doctor might have added that President Johnson has issued a proclamation of amnesty in accordance with that petition. We publish it this week. Jeff. Davis, however, was free before. Republican Judges refused to try him, and Horace Greeley and other eminent Republicans then bailed him. The petition of Senator Buckalew and others seems to have had the intended effect.

SLAUGHTERING HOGS.—As this is the season for killing hogs, the following plan for dispatching porkers, by a Chester county farmer, may be of interest to some of our readers, who desire to do their butchering quietly, expeditiously, and with a due regard to humanity. He says, kill your hogs by shooting them. He has tried it for many years, and declares that he shall never abandon it to return to the old sticking and squealing method. All that is necessary to be done is to place a small plug made of hickory or some hard wood into your gun, and with a small charge of powder drive it into the brain of the animal at a point between or a little above the eyes. This will cause instant death. In nine cases out of ten the hog will turn on its back, and can be stuck and bled freely. The advantages of this method may be enumerated as follows: It requires less help, is more expeditious, the hog dies without a struggle, is not excited, and bleeds as freely, if not more so, than when stuck alone. The pork is not so warm after killing, is much better, will keep as well; and lastly, it is more humane than to use the knife exclusively.—Sunbury Gazette.

THE annual sale of the Pews in St. Paul's Church will take place on next Saturday afternoon, January 2, 1869, at one o'clock P. M. A full attendance of the members of the parish is desired. There will be other business of great importance brought before the congregation by the vestry, and they earnestly hope a proper interest in the affairs of the church will be manifested. C.

OF course you can! Can what? Why keep warm, if you will only take the trouble to call on our friend Chemberlin the enterprising merchant tailor, and get some of his admirable garments. Winter suits and overcoats which will defy the weather. He has also underclothing and gentlemen's furnishing goods, fit for the season.

EDITORS, ATTENTION.—EDITORIAL CONVENTION.—A Convention of the editorial fraternity of Central Pennsylvania, will be held at Bellefonte, on Friday the 8th day of January, 1869, for the double purpose of celebrating the anniversary of the battle of New Orleans, and agreeing upon a scale of prices for advertising and job work, to be hereafter strictly adhered to. It is expected, of course, that a "good time" will be incidental, and editors generally throughout the State are invited to come and bring their "knitting" with them. Papers throughout the State are requested to copy this notice. By order of Committee.

DISRAELI the Elder, is the author of several very curious and entertaining works, under the names of, "Curiosities of Literature." "Amenities of Literature" "Calamities of Authors," "Quarrels of Authors," and "The Literary character." They are among the classics of the English language, and have gathered up the odds and ends literature, and dressed them up in a style and manner unique.

The works are published in uniform style, in cloth, in nine volumes crown 800, at $15.00, by W. J. Widdletonvo, 27 Howard Street New York. If any person desires to make a present to a friend, nothing more entertaining and beautiful can be chosen that the above editor of the works of "Disraeli the Elder."

PROSPECTUS. "THE AGE," for 1869. CIRCULATE THE DOCUMENTS. A Daily and Weekly Democratic Journal in Philadelphia! Improvements in every Department, Political, Literary, Commercial, Financial, and Agricultural.

The publishers of The Age beg to call the attention of the Democratic and Conservative masses to the Daily and Weekly issue of their popular Journal. The general dissemination of sound political information must result in great good to the Democratic party. Wherever Radicalism sends its poison, let us be prompt in furnishing the antidote!

We have just finished an exciting political struggle, and the Democratic party, vigorous and undismayed, is now ready to begin the fight again, and to fight on until victory crowns our efforts.

One of the most powerful energies in securing victory is the Democratic press of the country, and every man who can afford to subscribe for a Democratic newspaper should at once do so.

THE DAILY AGE

Will continue to be in the future what it was in the past—the earnest defender of the Union and the Constitution—the bold and fearless advocate of Democratic principles—and the constant and unyielding foe of Radicalism in every form that it presents itself to the people. It will contain the latest news from all parts of the world. Discussions of all subjects of general interest and importance; editorial comments on government, Politics, Trade, Finance, and all the current questions of the day, and will have all the characteristics of a live, leading, progressive journal.

THE WEEKLY AGE

Will be a complete compendium of the news of the week, and will contain a large quantity of original, political, literary, agricultural, and miscellaneous matter, making it in all respects a first-class family journal, as well for the politician as the general reader.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

TIME'S first footprints are wrinkles and gray hair, and although nothing has yet been discovered to eradicate the former the latter may be readily obliterated by the use of Ring's Vegetable Ambrosia. We know that it will restore gray hair to its original color and remove from the scalp all itching or irritation, whether caused by dandruff or humors, at the same time imparting to the hair that glossy and beautiful look so much desired.

TO CONSUMPTIVES.

The advertiser, having been restored to health in a few weeks, by a very simple remedy, after having suffered several years with a severe lung affection, and that dread disease, Consumption—is anxious to make known to his fellow-sufferers the means of cure.

To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used (free of charge), with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure cure for Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, etc. The only object of the advertiser in sending the prescription is to benefit the afflicted, and spread information which he conceives to be invaluable; and he hopes every sufferer will try this remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing. Parties wishing the prescription will please address Rev. Edward A. Wilson, 165 South Second St., Williamsburgh, Kings county, New York.

To Physicians.

NEW YORK, August [illegible]

Allow me to call your attention to my preparation of Compound Extract Buchu. The component parts are Buchu, Long Leaf, Cubebs, Juniper Berries.

MODE OF PREPARATION,—Buchu, in vacuo, Juniper Berries, by distillation, to form a fine gin. Cubebs extracted by displacement by spirits obtained from Juniper Berries, containing very little sugar, a small proportion of spirit, and more palatable than any now in use. The active properties are by this mode extracted.

Buchu, as prepared by Druggists generally, is of a dark color. It is a plant that emits its fragrance; the action of a flame destroys this (its active principle), leaving a dark and glutinous decoction. Mine is the color of ingredients. The Buchu in my preparation predominates; the smallest quantity of the other ingredients are added, to prevent fermentation; upon inspection, it will be found not to be a Tincture, as made in Pharmacopœa, nor is it a Syrup—and therefore can be used in cases where fever or inflammation exists. In this, you have the knowledge of the ingredients and the mode of preparation.

Hoping that you will favor it with a trial, and that upon inspection it will meet with your approbation,

With a feeling of confidence,
I am, very respectfully,
H. T. HELMBOLD.

Chemist and Druggist of 16 Years' Experience in Philadelphia, and now located at his Drug and Chemical Warehouse, 594 Broadway, New York.

[From the largest Manufacturing Chemists in the World.]

"I am acquainted with Mr. H. T. Helmbold; he occupied the Drug Store opposite my residence, and was successful in conducting the business where others had not been equally so before him. I have been favorably impressed with his character and enterprise.

WILLIAM WEIGHTMAN,
Firm of Powers & Weightman, Manufacturing Chemists, Ninth and Brown Streets, Philadelphia.

Helmbold's Fluid Extract Buchu, for weakness arising from indiscretion. The exhausted powers of Nature which are accompanied by so many alarming symptoms, among which will be found, Indisposition to Exertion, Loss of Memory, Wakefulness, Horror of Disease, or Forebodings of Evil; in fact, Universal Lassitude, Prostration, and inability to enter into the enjoyments of society.

The Constitution, once affected with Organic Weakness, requires the aid of Medicine to strengthen and invigorate the system, which Helmbold's Extract Buchu invariably does. If no treatment is submitted to, Consumption or Insanity ensues.

Helmbold's Fluid Extract Buchu, in affections peculiar to Females, is unequaled by any other preparation, as in Chlorosis, or Retention, Painfulness, or Suppression of Customary Evacuations, Ulcerated or Schirrus State of the Uterus, and all complaints incident to the sex, whether arising from habits of dissipation, imprudence in, or the decline or change of life.

Helmbold's Fluid Extract Buchu and Improved Rose Wash will radically exterminate from the system diseases arising from habits of dissipation, at little expense, little or no change in diet, no inconvenience or exposure; completely superseding those unpleasant and dangerous remedies, Copaiva and Mercury, in all these diseases.

Use Helmbold's Fluid Extract Buchu in all diseases of these organs, whether existing in male or female, from whatever cause originating, and no matter of how long standing. It is pleasant in taste and odor, "immediate" in action, and more strengthening than any of the preparations of Bark or Iron.

Those suffering from broken-down or delicate constitutions, procure the remedy at once.

The reader must be aware that, however slight may be the attack of the above diseases, it is certain to affect the bodily health and mental powers.

All the above diseases require the aid of a Diuretic. Helmbold's Extract Buchu is the great Diuretic.

☞ Sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, Price $1.25 per bottle, or six bottles for $6.50. Delivered to any address, Describe symptoms in all communications. Address, H. T. Helmbold, Drug and Chemical Warehouse, 594 Broadway, N. Y.

None are genuine unless done up in steel-engraved wrapper, with fac-simile of my Chemical Warehouse, and signed. H. T. HELMBOLD.

The Columbian.

BLOOMSBURG, FRIDAY, JAN. 1, 1869.

OUR thanks are due Robert Roan and H. W. Vanderslice, for missing numbers of the Columbian to complete our files.

The gentlemen who had in contemplation the erection of a Town Hall on the corner of Main and Market Streets, have decided not to go on with the improvement at present.

WE call attention this week to the advertisement of C. E. Savage, watchmaker and jeweler. He has a fine stock of goods of the very best quality. He has also an able practical watchmaker, to attend to repairing of all kinds.

NOTICE.—All persons desirous of obtaining Tavern Licenses for the ensuing year must file their applications with the Clerk of the Court, on or before the ninth day of January next.

DON'T fail to go and hear Hewlett's famous lecture "Hits at the Times" on next Wednesday evening at the court house. He has the reputation of being one of the most humorous speakers alive.

A ROCK-FISH, recently taken from the Potomac, was found to contain in its stomach a certificate of membership in the M. E. Church. Internal evidence of Christianity is always considered the most conclusive.

TO POST-MASTERS.—In the transfer of several hundred additional names to our list it may be possible in a few cases we have duplicated names. Where two papers come to the same address or where they are sent to the wrong office, we trust post-masters will promptly notify us by letter.

DURING the past week our ice men have been busily engaged filling the ice-houses in town. The ice is of good thickness and quality. Its use has become not only a luxury but a necessity. In sickness, or for the purpose of preserving meats and vegetables there is nothing better. A building for it can be cheaply made, and the first cost of the article is—nothing.

ODD FELLOWS HALL.—We are pleased to learn from the Committee entrusted with the erection of the Odd Fellows Hall in this place, that the building will go up next spring. We are glad to hear of this determination, and hope our citizens generally will encourage the enterprise. The building will be an ornament to the town, and the Hal will supply a want long felt in this community.—Berwick Gazette.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.—This body met on Tuesday forenoon, and held three sessions daily adjourning Thursday. The exercises were of the most entertaining and useful character. Profs. Osborne and Taylor were present, and added much to the interest of the Convention by their lectures and teachings. The object does not seem to have been fully understood as numbers of schools did not join the Convention.

SKATERS, TAKE NOTICE!—In view of the skating season, the following, from Hall's Journal of Health, may save our friends who indulge in the recreation of skating no small amount of discomfort. "Before starting for the ice, bathe your feet in cold water, dry them perfectly, and give them a good rubbing with a crash towel, put on a pair of woolen or heavy cotton stockings, and your feet will remain comfortably warm for three or four hours in the coldest weather."

TO ADVERTISERS.—Beyond all question the COLUMBIAN is the best advertising medium in this section of the State. With a circulation far exceeding any of our neighbors, we charge no more than our cotemporaries. Our paper is the organ of a party which outnumbers its opponents in this county two to one, and there is no method of reaching that population except through our columns. The person who advertises with us has the satisfaction of knowing that he has the ear of two-thirds of our people, and that his advertisement goes weekly into 2,500 families.

Notwithstanding the large accession to our lists, the rates for the present will remain unchanged.

WE have received the "New Eclectic Magazine" for January 1869, published by Trumbull & Murdoch, 64 Lexington Street, Baltimore. Its selections are made with great care both from English and American sources, and are invariably in good taste. The January number contains many fine articles from the English reviews, biographical sketches of Baron Rothschild from the New York World, and the Marquis of Hastings from the New York Times. The type and paper are of the best and the orange and black cover, renders it the most attractive in appearance of any American Magazine.

As the down train on the Lackawanna and Bloomsburg railroad was passing the river bridge over Pittston [illegible] Pittston, in Luzerne county, [illegible]day, it ran over a young Welsh girl eighteen years, named Jones, who was walking on the track. She attempted to use a cattle guard, and [illegible] two rails [illegible] and narrow gauges, and got [illegible] between timbers. She threw herself outside the track and fell in the cattle yard, but could not release her foot, and the locomotive passed over her, ankle, crushing the bones. Conductor Adams and one or two assistants carried her to her home near by. The fall saved her life, perhaps, but must have broken her ankle before the train struck her.

WE would again call the attention of Postmasters to the fact that when newspapers are not taken from their offices, they are required by law to write a letter to the editor of the paper not taking, informing him of the fact. Many Postmasters simply return the paper without giving the name of the office, thereby causing much unnecessary trouble, for it is hardly to be expected that with a large circulation the Post Office address of each subscriber can be remembered. We trust this notice will be sufficient to cause Post masters to observe the requirements of the law.

THE KALEIDOSCOPE

——A map of busy life,

NO. LXXXX.

A SOUTH AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

IN 1819, New Granada and Venezuela under Bolivar declared their Independence of Spain, and in July 1821, after a little struggle, the Republic of Columbia was formed including Ecuador. The Republic was a failure from the beginning, and dissolved after a turbulent existence of ten years. Bolivar, its head and front—the Washington of South America—the man whose fiery zeal roused the sluggish natives from the coast to the Andes to revolution—in 1830 wrote as follows to General Flores:

"I have been in power for nearly 20 years, from which I have gathered only a few definite results:—"

"1. America, for us, is ungovernable."

"2. He who dedicates his services to revolution, plows the sea."

"3. The only thing that can be done in America is to emigrate."

"4. This country will inevitably fall into the hands of the unbridled rabble, and little by little become a prey to petty tyrants of all colors and races."

"5. Devoured as we shall be by all possible crimes, and ruined by our ferociousness, the Europeans will not deem it worth while to conquer us."

"6. If it were possible for any part of the world to return to a state of primitive chaos, that would be the last stage of Spanish America."

The predictions of the "Liberator" are being rapidly fulfilled. From Mexico to Terra del Fuego the people are in a constant state of rebellion and war. With constitutions of the most liberal pattern, it is remarkable that there is more peace, prosperity, and real liberty in Brazil, under an Emperor, than in any of those hybrid Republics, which have substituted American anarchy for Spanish despotism. In fact, it would be better for that people, for civilization, for Christianity, if they could exchange their wars and bloodshed and tumults for the rigorous despotism of Russia.

It is not a matter of any difficulty to effect a revolution. It is not material whether the administration is just and humane or not; whether the leaders of a rebellion are worthy or not; if they have money they can buy the standing army, which is always in the market, and can be purchased by the highest bidder. Added to this is the hope of plunder which is the consequence of every successful rebellion. Patriotism is a mere name—liberty a myth.

While in Quito, Ecuador, I witnessed one of these periodical outbreaks. For some time the plotters had been at work, and one of them was said to be Carrion, the Vice-President then at Cuenca. Soon a favorable time for action arrived. The Peruvians had blockaded Guayaguil, and lent the factionists active support. President Robles by his tyrannical conduct had created many enemies, who were actively engaged in attempting his overthrow, and the gratification of the Quitonians was intense when they saw the main army marched towards the frontier, leaving the Capital exposed.

On Sunday May 1st, 1859, hearing the shouts "Revolution!" "Revolution!" I ran out to the Plaza Mayor where the people were congregating in large numbers, and apparently through a preconcerted understanding. Suddenly the crowd moved towards the President's Palace. Thinking that it was to be attacked, and wishing to witness the scene, I joined the throng. The barracks were separated from the Capital by a narrow street, both ends of which were guarded by squads of soldiers. In my eagerness to see what was going on I had reached the head of the column which now faced the soldiers. In front of the barracks the commandante had placed a small piece of Artillery, and hastily loading it to the muzzle with canister prepared to discharge it at the insurgents. My position became a perilous one, but I soon found escape was impossible, because in my rear was an excited mob of priests, negroes, Indians, women—persons of all classes and conditions in the highest state of excitement, and armed in anticipation of a fray.

While the frenzied mob were moving to the attack, a soldier with a burning brand stepped towards the gun with the intention of discharging it. A few scattering shots at the same time were fired by the populace, and I involuntarily shut my eyes, expecting to be blown to atoms by the discharge of the gun. While shudderingly awaiting the issue, I heard a shout from the upper end of the street. A detachment of the mob had forced the guard at that point and the soldiers, probably as the result of a previous understanding, threw down their arms, and the Revolution in Quito was complete.

The government was completely changed, a provisional one established, troops called out, forced levies made, enemies imprisoned or banished, and the old order of things otherwise remained unchanged. The different legations were thronged with refugees and their property, while their wives and daughters sought the convents for safety. I believe these asylums are always respected.

Garcia Moreno, a priest, was finally made President, and though a man of much energy and ability, his administration was probably more remarkable for tyranny and persecution of political opponents, than that of any of his predecessors.

QUIEN SABE?

SAD ACCIDENT.—We regret to announce that John Martinee, a young lad, aged about fourteen years, formerly of this place, met with an accident at Danville one day this week, by having his legs crushed by some mine cars. Death resulted from the great injury sustained. His remains were brought to this place for interment on Wednesday last.—Berwick Gazette.

NEW YEAR'S GIFTS.—If you wish to make a sensible, and, at the same time, a valuable present to a friend, go to Lowenberg's well known store and get one of his well made and stylish suits of clothes or a handsome overcoat. Such a gift is well worthy of acceptance.

N. B. If you have no friend to whom you wish to present such a present, buy for yourself—you will not repent of the purchase.

Congress not being in session the news from Washington is exceedingly dull. Attempts are made to hush up the breach between Grant and the Radicals, but it will out.

H A R P E R ' S B A Z A R.

A supplement containing numerous full-sized patterns of useful articles accompanies the paper every fortnight, and occasionally an elegant colored fashion plate.

Harper's Bazar contains 16 folio pages of the size of Harper's Weekly, printed on superfine calendered paper and is published weekly.

Critical Notices of the Press.

Harper's Bazar contains, besides pictures, patterns, etc., a variety of matter of especial use and interest to the family; articles on health, dress, and housekeeping in all branches; its editorial matter is especially adapted to the circle it is intended to interest and instruct; and it has, besides, good stories and literary matter of merit. It is not surprising that the journal, with such features, has achieved in a short time an immense success; for something of its kind was desired in thousands of families, and its publishers have filled the demand.—N. Y. Evening Post.

Whether we consider its claims as based upon the elegance and superiority of its paper, its typographical appearance, the taste and judgement displayed in the engravings, or the literary contributions contained in its pages, we unhesitatingly pronounce it to be superior in each and every particular to any other similar publication here or abroad.—Phila. Legal Intelligencer.

We know of no other English or American Journal of fashion that can pretend to approach it in completeness and variety.—N. Y. Times.

It has the merit of being sensible, of conveying instruction, of giving excellent patterns in every department, and of being well stocked with good reading matter.—Watchman and Reflector.

To dress according to Harper's Bazar will be the aim and ambition of the women of America.—Boston Transcript.

THE ATLANTIC ALMANAC

FOR 1869.

EDITED BY DONALD G. MITCHELL.

The Almanac for 1869 is even more valuable and attractive than that for 1868 which won great popularity as a Miscellany of Literature and Art. Its Literary contents are all original, having been prepared expressly for it, and combine in a high degree the practical and the entertaining.

The Artistic portion is in harmony with the Literary contents, the four colored plates and the twelve calendar pictures being original designs, chiefly illustrative of American scenes and customs. The Astronomical department is unusually full and important, comprising an account of the Total eclipse of the Sun which will occur in August 1869, together with a map showing the portions of the United States where the eclipse will be visible. This eclipse will be of a more striking character than any that has occurred since 1806.

The Almanac contains four Full-page Illustrations, in colors of The Season, and Fine Art Illustrations by the most skilful Artists, such as Darley, Hoppin, Fenn, Perkins, White, Hitchcock, Eytinge, and Waud.

A beautiful colored cover adds to the attractiveness of the Almanac.

It is sold at fifty cents by Booksellers and dealers, or will be sent postpaid by the Publishers, Ticknor and Fields Boston.

CLOTHES BY MACHINERY.

The undersigned would respectfully call the attention of the public to his new and approved method of making clothes by a system based upon mathematical principles, which renders it impossible to be otherwise than perfectly accurate.

He claims for his method the following advantages:

FIRST.

Perfect accuracy.

SECOND.

A saving of two thirds of the time usually taken to cut out the cloth.

THIRD.

Ability to measure any figure so as to insure a neat fit.

FOURTH.

It does away with the necessity of being measured more than once, so often is the case from the mistakes, rehension or mistake of t[illegible]

He would urge the public to give it a trial, as he is satisfied that it will give perfect satisfaction. He will be happy to exhibit and explain its working at any time to visitors.

NEW MONTHLY MAGAZINE.

Critical Notices of the Press.

The most popular Monthly in the world.—New York Observer.

We must refer in terms of eulogy to the high tone and varied excellences of HARPER'S MAGAZINE—a journal with a monthly circulation of about 170,000 copies—in whose pages are to be found some of the choicest light and general reading of the day. We speak of this work as an evidence of the culture of the American People; and the popularity it has acquired is merited. Each Number contains fully 144 pages of reading matter, appropriately illustrated with good woodcuts; and it combines in itself the racy monthly and the more philosophical quarterly, blended with the best features of the daily journal. It has great power in the dissemination of a love of pure literature.—TRUBNER'S Guide to American Literature, London.

We can account for its success only by the simple fact that it meets precisely the popular taste, furnishing a variety of pleasing and instructive reading for all.—Zion's Herald, Boston.

Riquet with the Tuft.

ONCE upon a time there was a Queen, who was brought to bed of a son so ugly and so ill-shaped that it was for a long time doubtful if he possessed a human form. A Fairy, who was present at his birth, affirmed that he would not fail to be amiable, as he would have much good-sense. She added, even, that he would be able, in consequence of the gift she had endowed him with, to impart equal intelligence to the person he should love best. All this consoled the poor Queen a little, who was much distressed at having brought into the world so hideous a little monkey. It is true that the child was no sooner able to speak than he said a thousand pretty things, and that there was in all his actions an indescribable air of intelligence which charmed one. I had forgotten to say that he was born with a little tuft of hair on his head, which occasioned him to be named Riquet with the Tuft; for Riquet was the family name.

At the end of seven or eight years, the Queen of a neighbouring kingdom was brought to bed of two daughters. The first that came into the world was fairer than day. The Queen was so delighted, that it was feared her great joy would prove hurtful to her. The same Fairy who had assisted at the birth of little Riquet with the Tuft was present upon this occasion, and to moderate the joy of the Queen, she declared to her that this little Princess would have no mental capacity, and that she would be as stupid as she was beautiful. This mortified the Queen exceedingly; but a few minutes afterwards she experienced a very much greater annoyance, for the second girl she gave birth to proved to be extremely ugly. "Do not distress yourself so much, Madam," said the Fairy to her. "Your daughter will find compensation; she will have so much sense that her lack of beauty will scarcely be perceived." "Heaven thesend it may be so," replied the Queen; "but are there no means of giving a little sense to the eldest, who is so lovely?" "I can do nothing for her, Madam, in the way of wit," said the Fairy, "but everything in that of beauty; and as there is nothing in my power that I would not do to gratify you, I will endow her with the ability to render beautiful the person who shall please her."

As these two Princesses grew up, their endowments increased in the same proportion, and nothing was talked of anywhere but the beauty of the eldest and the intelligence of the youngest. It is true that their defects also greatly increased with their years. The youngest became uglier every instant, and the eldest more stupid every day. She either made no answer when she was spoken to, or she said something foolish. With this she was so awkward, that she could not place four pieces of china on a mantel-shelf without breaking one of them, nor drink a glass of water without spilling half of it on her dress. Notwithstanding the great advantage of beauty to a girl, the youngest bore away the palm from her sister nearly always, in every society. At first they gathered round the handsomest, to gaze at and admire her; but they soon left her for the wittiest, to listen to a thousand agreeable things; and people were astonished to find that, in less than a quarter of an hour, the eldest had not a soul near her, and that all the company had formed a circle round the youngest. The former, though very stupid, noticed this, and would have given, without regret, all her beauty for half the sense of her sister. The Queen, discreet as she was, could not help reproaching her frequently with her folly, which made the poor Princess ready to die of grief. One day that she had withdrawn into a wood to bewail her misfortune, she saw a little man approach her, of most disagreeable appearance, but dressed very magnificently. It was the young Prince Riquet with the Tuft, who, having fallen in love with her from seeing her portraits, which were sent all round the world, had quitted his father's kingdom to have the pleasure of beholding and speaking to her. Enchanted to meet her thus alone, he accosted her with all the respect and politeness imaginable. Having remarked, after paying the usual compliments, that she was very melancholy, he said to her, "I cannot comprehend, Madam, how a person so beautiful as you are can be so sad as you appear; for though I may boast of having seen an infinity of lovely women, I can avouch that I have never beheld one whose beauty could be compared to yours." "You are pleased to say so, sir," replied the Princess; and there she stopped. "Beauty," continued Riquet, "is so great an advantage, that it ought to surpass all others; and when one possesses it, I do not see anything that could very much distress you." "I had rather," said the Princess, "be as ugly as you, and have good sense, than possess the beauty I do, and be as stupid as I am." "There is no greater proof of good sense, Madam, than the belief that we have it not; it is the nature of that gift, that the more we have, the more we believe we are deficient in it." "I do not know how that may be," said the Princess, "but I know well enough that I am very stupid, and that is the cause of the grief which is killing me." "If that is all that afflicts you, Madam, I can easily put an end to your sorrow." "And how would you do that?" said the Princess. "I have the power, Madam," said Riquet with the Tuft, "to give as much wit as any one can possess to the person I love the most; and as you, Madam, are that person, it will depend entirely upon yourself whether or not you will have so much wit, provided that you are willing to marry me." The Princess was thunderstruck, and replied not a word. "I see," said Riquet with the Tuft, "that this proposal pains you; and I am not surprised at it; but I give you a full year to consider of it." The Princess had so little sense, and at the same time was so anxious to have a great deal, that she thought the end of that year would never come; so she accepted at once the offer that was made her. She had no sooner promised Riquet with the Tuft that she would marry him that day twelve months, than she felt herself to be quite another person to what she was previously. She found she possessed an incredible facility of saying anything she wished, and of saying it in a shrewd, yet easy and natural manner. She commenced on the instant, and kept up a sprightly conversation with Riquet with the Tuft, during which she chatted away at such a rate, that Riquet with the Tuft began to believe he had given her more wit than he had kept for himself. When she returned to the Palace, the whole Court was puzzled to account for a change so sudden and extraordinary, for in proportion to the number of foolish things they had heard her say formerly, were the sensible and exceedingly clever observations she now gave utterance to. All the Court was in a state of joy which is not to be conceived. The younger sister alone was not very much pleased, as no longer possessing over her elder sister the advantage of wit, she now only appeared, by her side, as a very disagreeable-looking person. The King was now led by his eldest daughter's advice, and sometimes even held his Council in her apartmant. The news of this alteration having spread abroad, all the young Princes of the neighboring kingdoms exerted themselves to obtain her affection, and nearly all of them asked her hand in marriage; but she found none of them sufficiently intelligent, and she listened to all of them without engaging herself to any one.

Farmer's Department.

STICK TO ONE THING.—There are many farmers who do nothing long enough to make it pay, and consequently they lose in every thing. At one time they conclude to devote themselves to stock raising. Before they get fairly under good headway in this, they change their minds and go back to raising grain. Some make a speciality, for a time, of a certain crop, wheat, corn or potatoes, for instance. While they are following this speciality, the crops may be small and the prices low, and turn to another just in time to miss large crops and good prices in what they have left.

The best farmers we have observed are those who first find out what their soil is best adapted to produce. They then turn their energies in that direction and go straight forward in that line. A poor crop does not discourage them. Low prices do not discourage them. They keep on, and are sure to be finally successful,

To illustrate our idea:—We once knew a farmer who always made it a point to fatten from twenty-five to thirty hogs every year. Let the price of pork be high or low, he every year had his lot of hogs of about the usual number. He took great pride in having the best in the neighbohood. Some years, perhaps, he might have done better by selling his corn instead of feeding it. Some years, perhaps, he might have done better by turning his whole attention to some other speciality in farming. But we should always notice this, that, taking one year with another for a long time, say ten years, he made the hogs pay. He was a successful farmer.

THE TRADE FOR A FARMER.—Every young man who means to be a farmer, ought first to learn a mechanical trade. We would rather learn the carpenter and joiner's than any other, as it oftener comes into use on the farm. The farmer who understands this trade has many advantages over one who does not, and has to run for a mechanic for every little job required to be done on a farm. Even if he work but a short time at the trade, say one season only, under a good master, he will find the knowledge of great benefit to him many times. If a young man is robust and healthy, this trade, in connection with a good practical education, sufficient to qualify him as a teacher of a district school in the Winter season, is about as good a start in life as any young man can have who is not furnished with capital ready to his hand, and the rare faculty of knowing how to use it.

VILE VINEGAR.—We caution the public against the use of adulterated vinegar. The heavy Government tax, on alcohol has raised the price so much that resort is had to a cheaper substance to give the required acidity to vinegar. For this purpose, sulphuric, nitric and hydrochloric acid are all used; though sulphuric acid, as the cheapest and sourest thing that can be found, is chiefly used. This, however, is destructive to pickles and whatever is placed in it for preservation, and very injurious to the health of those who use the vinegar made of it. A gallon of the stuff called vinegar can be made for a cent or two from sulphuric acid and water. To detect the presence of sulphuric acid, take a small quantity of the vinegar in a clear glass, and drop a few drops of the chloride of barytum into it, or the nitrate of baryta. If the liquid presents a cloudy appearance there is sulphuric acid in it, and it should be returned to the manufacturer or turned into the gutter.

STOCK will thrive better with just as much food given as they will eat up clean. This should be at stated periods and regularly attended to. If by feeding economically, a large surplus is found to be on hand at the end of the season, it is better than to have wasted it; but it would have been better and more profitable to have added more stock, which would have yielded more profit.

Don't waste the food, nevertheless; your fields may not yield so abundantly the next season, and your hay being well secured will lose none of its virtues by being kept over.—American Stock Journal.

SOMETHING WORTH KNOWING.—A friend says, one day while purchasing a lot of dried fruit, I discovered small pieces of sassafras bark mixed amongst it, and upon inquiry was informed that it was a preventive against the worm. It is said that dried fruit put away with a little bark, (say a large handful to the bushel,) will last for years unmolested by those troublesome little insects, which so often destroy hundreds of bushels in a single seasons. The remedy is cheap and simple. Try it.

AN Indiana paper says: "There is a man in Dubois county who is now living with his eighth wife. Death has relieved him of three, and divorce befriended him on four occasions. He hasn't decided which to try next. A funeral costs more than a bill of divorce but it raises no question of alimony."

OLE BULL, the famous violinist was a passenger on the America one of the steamers recently destroyed in the Ohio river. He escaped with his fiddle, the only bridge on the boat, losing everything else he had with him. He waded ashore it is said.

TESTIMONIALS.

Hon. Geo. W. Woodward,

Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Pa., writes

Philadelphia, March 16, 1867.

"I find 'Hoofland's German Bitters' is a good tonic, useful in diseases of the digestive organs, and of great benefit in cases of debility, and want of nervous action in the system.

"Yours truly,

"GEO. W. WOODWARD."

Hon. James Thompson,

Judge of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania.

Philadelphia, April 28, 1866.

"I consider 'Hoofland's German Bitters' a valuable medicine in case of attacks of Indigestion or Dyspepsia. I can certify this from my experience of it.

"Yours, with respect,

"JAMES THOMPSON."

From Rev. Joseph H. Kennard, D.D.

Pastor of the Tenth Baptist Church, Philadelphia.

Dr. Jackson—Dear Sir: I have been frequently requested to connect my name with recommendations of different kinds of medicines, but, regarding the practice as out of my appropriate sphere, I have in all cases declined; but with a clear proof in various instances and particularly in my own family, of the usefulness of Dr. Hoofland's German Bitters, I depart for once from my usual course, to express my full conviction that, for general debility of the system, and especially for Liver Complaint, it is a safe and valuable preparation. In some cases it may fail; but usually, I doubt not, it will be very beneficial to those who suffer from the above causes.

Yours, very respectfully,

J. H. KENNARD,

Eighth, below Coates St.

From Rev. E. D. Fendall,

Assistant Editor Christian Chronicle, Philadelphia.

I have derived decided benefit from the use of Hoofland's German Bitters, and feel it my privilege to recommend them as a most valuable tonic to all who are suffering from general debility or from diseases arising from derangement of the liver.

Yours truly,

E. D. FENDALL.

People whose heads are covered with Dandruff and Humors, use it, and have clean coats and clear and healthy scalps!

Bald-Headed Veterans have their remaining locks tightened, and the bare spots covered with a luxuriant growth of Hair, and dance for joy!
